IT'S THE LARRY ISSUE

Well, well, welcome to this half of .PS, which happens to be better than any underground skate material ever produced in the Soviet Union, so there. In this side we've got some 90° variations and an intro page on Larry. Also we've got something we could hardly believe...demo. Yea, we know it's kind of egotistical to show ourselves in our own demo in our own mag, but hey not much is going on as far as other skaters go. City hall got us to do it, and geez, they don't even allow skating in the streets.

Here's a little something I found interesting. Last week I recorded the theme song to Mister Rodger's Neighborhood off the TV onto my tape player. I played the tape backwards and found that you can clearly hear the words, "Slap me wit dem leather shackles mama," repeated over and over again in a low hissing voice. Hmmm

Brand X sucks

BOARDS WEVE HAD BY REYTON

My articles aimed more at big guys, me being one myself. To me the issue isn't whether a board breaks or not, it's how long it takes for it to break. There isn't a brand of board I've had that I haven't broken. Zorbac, although heavy, takes a beating and lasts long. Alvas work alright, but be cautious of those ultra-steep tails. Visions are pretty good. The ones to stay away from are G4S, Santa Cruz, Hosoi, and Sims. Especially if they have die-layer plys; that weakens the board and it chunks easier. As for the rest of the board, don't ride Trackers or old indys in the street. And one more thing, Hosoi Rockets SUCK! They come easy and the bearings come loose really quick. That's it.

Scott gets all blurry

More STUFF To Read!!!!!!

Hello again! Hope you've liked number two so far, you should. I've sure had enough time to put it together with my broken ankle and all, but by the time you read this I'll be back onboard, so you guys write in and tell us about any cool spots you know of and if you want to session, call us at (214) 729-5742. For the next issue scrounge up a measly 75¢ and don't forget that letter or we'll send you an envelope full of dead crickets. I'll trade anything - mags, drawings, mag shirts, stickers, lint, whatever. And as all allways, we'll trade stickers for pics. Well, the house is on fire so I better go.

Few street ramps were possible and were all in an abandoned parking lot. We were surprised to find the natives were great olliers, the reason being the huge cracks strewn about making it hard to go ramp to ramp. They had the place wired and were whizzing all around, whereas we had to concentrate on one ramp at a time, mainly on this circular, sadlands-like ramp that was interesting. We could grab an air straight up to the tail on the other side. Also there was a flat piece of plastic all around the edge allowing you to slide all the way around. Dave, being the ollie man that he is, eventually got used to the terrain and was flying all around. One native bailed just ahead of him and he ollied off the lift and cleared him by 3'. Once he even gained enough speed to grab a judo air off one of the quators.

The next day we left to look for vert. We heard of an empty pool at a chlorine processing plant and left to investigate. Low and behold, there it was. Unaided and near perfect. I dropped in first and into complete ecstasy. It practically threw you out of the pool and sucked you back in, airs were possible near seven feet. Next was Neil and he seemed to find the coping to his liking and pulled off a new deal and extended hurricanes, plus super stalled inverts. Dave was pulling nice Caballerials and pulled off his first vert hoah. That whole day was incredible; hundreds of lines swayed side to side till dusk and it was finally time for home. With the pool at our backs we said our farewells to Nadu and the others and headed out. -END

Born out on ramp? Sick of pushing around the street? I've got the solution - the Pine Core ditch. We go there occasionally as it's a cross of the two. All the usual ditch tricks are possible and frequently accomplished. It has all a ditch needs - grindable lip and a parking block. Although it's right beside highway 155 near Tyler the cops don't bug ya and it doesn't even hold water. Now

AMERICAN SKATE

THE ADVENTURE CONTINUES-A

Africa, yes, Africa. A land of untapped energy and power, majestic and beautiful, besides, it takes up space in the mag. We felt the story was worthy to continue because Africa is truly unappreciated as a major skate area, bustling with energetic skate-life. Following is a tale of the skaters me, Neil Blender, and David Letterman traveling a village in Africa desert flatlands finding new skate spots, and meeting new skaters. Oh, none of this is true

Rrrring... rrrring (click) "Hello? Stacy Femta."
"Yo Stacy, wassup? This is Aaaron."
"Hey, wnda ya need?"
"Tickets, me, Neil, and David Letterman're gonna head to Africa'n check things out."
"David Letterman?"
"Yea, he skates y, know."
"Really? Cool. Well, ok, I'll send some tickets. Later."

We all waited over at Lance's where a viscio session ensued. Neil was popping fakie ollie finger flips to tail, I almost had gatairs, and Dave learned Japan airs six feet or. But the tickets arrived so we packed our pads and boards and headed to the air port and a two day skate tour of cent Africa.

On the Flight we managed to amuse ourselves by scanning a few dozen bags of peanuts, pelting people with bits of pay and spreading a rumor that Johny Carso was onboard then watching people look around for him. Dave liked that one.

The plane eventually found its way to a cracked, bumpy concrete airstrip of the only airport in Nigeria. We found ourselves to be in Makurdi, capital of Nigeria, or the shores of the Niger River.

Stacy definitely set everything up because no sooner had we left the front of the barn-like airport did a carload of skatee screeched up to pick us up and drive us out to Nadu's tent just outside town. Makurdi is a small village of 250 natives who lives in shacks along the roadsides.

With the vareness of wood in the area halfpipes were impossible but a

Hiya, and welcome to the P.S double issue issue. In this half is the Pine Cove ditch of Tyler and Africa II. If your confused, tough. As for new stories Sonny's dad found a super expensive, automatic everything camera in the snow at a Colorado ski trip so look for better picks later in the future. Sorry most of the shots are of us but with school still going on things just aren't clickin with other skaters. You nearby dudes write cause wed like to skate. Especially if you've got a cool ramp, ditch, etc nearby. We're always looking for new terrain. My typewriter's ribbon's gone dry so you get to enjoy the splendor of handwriting. -AAA

The Food Sharing Program!!

This is simply a follow-up to last issue's Free Meal Deal. By the time I'm through you'll never have to worry about where your next meal is coming from again. Here it is, the Food Sharing Program. Isn't as reliable as the Free Meal Deal because first you have to find a family having a picnic or a birthday, maybe a barbecue. Anyway, the best place to find it is at a park or zoo, I once got lucky at a YMCA. First gather whatever money you have if any, if not, fake it. Then look as sincere as possible and walk up to any woman in the group (they're the cushiest) and ask if you can buy some of their refreshments. They'll melt everytime. Usually I get a can of Coke and a sandwich. If they're jerks enough to try and sell you the stuff just leave, it's not like you'll ever see them again. Now get out there and take advantage of gullable citizens. -AAA
